3) Course Overview and Objectives

This course investigates the discipline of marketing from a strategic perspective, focusing on the planning and development of marketing strategies. Apart from providing a comprehensive overview of marketing strategy, the course has two overarching learning objectives: (1) Understand the conceptual frameworks, analytic processes, and diagnostic tools of marketing strategy; and (2) understand the role marketing strategy plays in corporate and business strategy. Topics examine the way in which marketing decisions can contribute to creating a competitive advantage and explain how to make changes to marketing strategies over time as well as respond to competitors' marketing strategies. Further, students learn about basic research methods and analyses for a correct formulation and execution of marketing strategies.

On successful completion of this course, students should be able to:

- Understand the fundamental principles involved in developing and managing marketing strategies; [L]
[SEP]
- Explain the critical importance of marketing strategy for superior business performance; [L]
[SEP]
- Critically evaluate a marketing strategy-related argument logically, such as the notion that [L]
[SEP] marketing strategy is a driver of shareholder-value; [L]
[SEP]
- Synthesize schools of thought in marketing strategy, for example the competing notions [L]
[SEP] that either strategy follows structure, or vice versa; [L]
[SEP]
- Solve complex marketing strategy-related problems, such as determining whether the most valuable customer segments have been targeted by a business; [L]
[SEP]
- Evaluate empirical and theoretical marketing strategy research from various sources. [L]
